

We are pleased to advise that today we have unveiled an updated version of our Technical Forums.

To our regular visitors, the upraged forum will seem very familiar and they will be navigating around it easily as though little had changed. However the new software adds functionality and new features such as direct integration with Facebook and Twitter. While these functions will not be activated until we are happy that the basic forum is working correctly, they will be turned soon.

Other functionality improvements include tags and a completely revised new content viewer making keeping track of the latest posts easier. Finally, as part of the upgrade process we will also be culling some of the older posts that are generally no longer relevant.

If you haven't visited our forum before then there is no better time than now. If you have an unanswered question about an LSC product, its operation or if you have encountered a problem then you might find your answer in the forum already or you can post a question and one of our thousands of members or a staff member will be able to help you.

Click here to be taken directly to our forum.

